Water & Beach Safety in Australia

Peter Fidler

Room 1

Audience: All

► Session description

Many international visitors come to enjoy Australia's beaches, but with little experience, can easily find themselves in difficulty. This session will help explain the most common dangers and how to avoid them.

Included will be a brief description of the most popular beach areas around Australia, Surf Life Saving Clubs, Professional Lifeguards and Learn to Surf Schools. There will also be information about the biggest dangers in the Surf:

- Swimming away from patrolled beaches
- Going out too far into deep water with poor swimming skills
- Not recognising a Rip and going straight into it
- What a Rip is and how to stay safe
- Marine stingers
- Sharks
- Rocks
- Other surfers
- Dumping waves

► Speaker

Peter Fidler
*Managing Director,
Go Ride a Wave,
Australia*

After a long family involvement with Surf Life Saving Peter became one of the first Professional Lifeguards in Victoria in 1980. He has since completed a Degree in Applied Science (Physical Education) and after winning many State and Australian National Surf Life Saving Competitions has also twice won Gold Medals in Masters events at World Surf Life Saving Championships. With more than 40 years experience as a volunteer surf life saver at various beaches around Australia, and almost 30 years involvement with Go Ride A Wave on the Sunshine Coast and Gold Coast in Queensland and the Great Ocean Road in Victoria, Peter has gained a wealth of knowledge about beach and ocean safety and is excited to be able to pass this on.

Great Education Agents Lead to a Great Start to Overseas Study

Emilia Fields

Room 1

Audience: All

► Session description

A great start to the overseas education of an international student begins with the professionalism of their education agent. The knowledge, passion and professionalism shown by agents regarding overseas study can make a major difference to the students' readiness to achieve academically, as well as to embrace a new culture. The correct orientation and preparation of students by a good agency is pivotal to their emotional, academic and educational success. This session will explore ways and means of achieving such outcomes.

Engaged Cities Produce Engaged Students

Jodie Duignan-George

Room 1

Audience: All

► Session description

To create the right environment for international students the importance and benefits of effective engagement with communities is essential. This flows from collaboration with local institutions in terms of pathways; ensuring that International students feel welcome and welcomed and ensuring the right support is in place. This is key for international students to have a successful study experience and what a smaller city destination like Cairns excels at. It is also something which is very important to parents and family members of international students when deciding on where to send their child.

► Speakers

Jodie Duignan-George

*Associate Vice-Chancellor, Cairns and Far North Region,
CQUniversity,
Australia*

Jodie joined CQUniversity in 2014 with the purpose of establishing a CQUniversity Campus in the heart of the Cairns CBD. With a background in Social Science and close to 20 years of experience working in higher education (from teaching through to commercial and corporate management) Jodie has broad knowledge of issues facing the sector.

Jodie has a keen interest in community development with particular expertise in business development. She is a member of a number of local and national boards and committees, including Cairns Chamber of Commerce, for which she serves as Vice President; and Engagement Australia for which she is Deputy Chair. Jodie has also served on the board of Study Cairns, for the past 7 years, the past 3 as Vice President. Jodie is committed to supporting the growth of International education in the Cairns Region.

Christchurch: Rebuild, Recover and Beyond

Bree Loverich

Room 2

Audience: All

► Session description

In 2011, Christchurch was elevated onto the world stage as the city of disaster. From disaster, the people rose to the occasion. Instead of unrest there was massive community support. Our City is now known for the people's ability to collaborate and creatively fill gaps with community focused fun. This disaster has resulted in the largest modern investment in a rebuild. Our City is wired and poised to be early adopters of autonomous vehicles as a form of public transport. We have designed an innovation precinct into the heart of the city to connect established enterprise with start-up incubators and our ICT graduate school. The rebuild, at this critical time, is allowing our city to respond beyond recovery. Christchurch has risen as a new breed of city, and is alive with opportunity.

The world is on the cusp of the 4th industrial revolution and we are all facing several grand global challenges. There is no clear picture of the future, but we do know that the modern learner must be sufficiently resilient and self-reliant. Today's students are, or should be, collaborative thinkers and doers, looking to curate authentic experiences with access to communities of likeminded people. For this reason, I feel our industry is over-emphasizing "world class" education based on University rankings. It's time to unpack and repackage this to reveal our modernity for the 21st century learner. Christchurch has more to offer than world class education; rather, it is a destination that provides our learners with exposure to a community with strengths in collaboration, creativity and problem solving. We lead in resilience, innovation and social responsibility simply because we have had to.

► Speaker

Bree Loverich
*Programme Manager,
Christchurch Educated,
New Zealand*

Bree's role is to lead the implementation of the international education strategy for the city of Christchurch. Key projects focus on product development, market acceleration and service quality, as well as strengthening partnerships for the regional destination marketing organization. Bree draws on firsthand experience as an international educationist and student advocate, having developed a Postgraduate Students' Association from the ground up, and taught at all levels of public schooling in Japan, USA and New Zealand. Working within health and construction businesses, she has also lead adult education product development for migrant workers. American born and raised, she has travelled the world to sample adventure sport locations. She has chosen Christchurch because there are few destinations worldwide that offer such amazing opportunities, a laidback city lifestyle and unparalleled access to the outdoors.

Agent Training and Professional Profile

Markus Badde & Chris Evason

Room 3

Audience: Agents

► Session description

An overview of how the Australian EATC (Education Agent Training Course) and the IATC (ICEF Agent Training Course) help professionalise and promote agency counsellor practices, through online programs, web-listings and free mobile applications.

The EATC (Education Agent Training Course) is an agent training course aimed at agents sending students to Australia. The EATC provides information about the Australian education system and Australia as a study destination, as well as education quality assurance issues and the Australian visa regulation system. Qualified Education Agent Counsellors are publicly listed at www.eatc.com/qualified_agents/

The IATC (ICEF Agent Training Course) is a practical, professional training course developed by ICEF for education agency-based student counsellors. The course is available online and free of charge to agency student counsellors in a self-paced modular format. Participants who complete the IATC assessment successfully are issued a certificate, certifying them as ICEF Trained Agent Counsellors (ITAC). Agencies with at least one ITAC on their staff are featured in an agency locator at www.icef.com/icef-agent-training/iatc/itac-finder/

The Qualified Education Agent (QEA) App, geo-positions agents who have undertaken recognised training programs on a free iOS and Android mobile app.

This session will introduce the EATC and the IATC, their contents, how to access these training courses and the benefits they provide to increasing an agent's professional profile.

Partner with the “Real” Australia

Patrick Hafenstein

Room 1

Audience: All

► Session description

With more student cities in the QS Top 100 than any other state of Australia and the most diverse offerings, there is no better state to partner with than Queensland. More than 1/3 of international students in Queensland are studying outside of the capital. And the experience is like nothing else in Australia. The new state International Education and Training strategy launched in November 2016 including a $6 million grants program demonstrates just how serious the government is about the sector. This presentation will offer an overview on the successful initiatives that are underway - from new marketing campaigns to internship programs, from the Gold Coast to Cairns. Find out how you can be part of the Queensland story.

When Things Go Wrong - What We Can Learn from Current Issues in Student Complaints about Education Agents and Providers

Ron Colley

Room 2

Audience: All

► Session description

The National Strategy for International Education 2025 notes that 'positive student experience is crucial to the success of Australia's International Education sector'. With a record number of international students choosing to study in Australia this year, the challenge for us all is to maintain the positive experience and if things go wrong, to restore it. This is where the Overseas Student Ombudsman (OSO) comes in, to assist students and private education providers to resolve deadlocked disputes, including a dispute involving the actions or decisions of an education agent associated with the provider.

Last year the Government introduced the Agent Code of Ethics to provide a guide to the expected professional behaviour of individual agents and agencies working with Australian international students, parents, providers and fellow agents across the sector. Using a recent example, we will explore the implications for students, providers and agents when things go wrong with the agent relationship.

► Speaker

Ron Colley,
*Director,
Overseas Students Ombudsman,
Australia*

Ron Colley works for the Commonwealth Ombudsman and is the director of the Ombudsman's Overseas Student Ombudsman and Postal Industry Ombudsman schemes. With over 40 years in the workforce, Ron draws on his vast experience in marketing, sales and stakeholder engagement in Government, private industry and community organisations, to work with industry to improve the quality of complaints management. Ron is married, lives and works in Melbourne and has family in both Melbourne and Perth.

Changes to English Language Proficiency Testing for Skilled Work Visas - What Agents Need to Know

Helen Cook

Room 3

Audience: Agents

► Session description

The New Zealand Immigration Department (INZ) has undertaken a major review of English requirements for skilled migration visas. New requirements introduced on 21 November 2016 mean that many more applicants will be required to provide an approved English proficiency test to meet visa requirements, as will their families.

Potential applicants for skilled migration will now have a choice of approved English proficiency test to meet those new English language requirements.

These changes have implications for those considering study in New Zealand as the majority of successful applicants for skilled migration are already living in New Zealand.

In Australia, similar measures were introduced to allow applicants a choice of English test for skilled migration and post study work visas in late 2014. This has seen a surge of interest in some of those new test options.

Research shows that applicants consider a range of factors in choosing which English test they should invest their time and energy.

Learn more about the new English test requirements and research on English test choice.

► Speaker

Helen Cook
*Associate Director (Client Relations) Australasia, Educational Testing Service,
Australia*

Helen Cook is the Associate Director Client Relations (Australasia) for Educational Testing Service (ETS), the largest not-for-profit research and measurement company globally.
